

REAL STUDENTS REAL VOICES

"The environment was different than the regular semester... there were a lot of motivated people."
—Sara Atzbi

"I worked and stayed off campus during winter, so I liked the flexibility of my hybrid course. I could do the work online, but also come to class."
—Josh Lewis

"As a transfer student I was playing catch up with my credits, so having the winter option was great... If I waited until spring it would've set me back."
—Christopher Marsillo

"I took public speaking in winter so I could focus on one class and improve my skills."
—Druhmil Shah

"Winter Session helped me fulfill graduation requirements so I could stay on track to double major in Economics and Human Resource Management in just three years."
—Jacob Pullis

"I took a year off and needed some extra credits. I took a Winter Session course to help me graduate on time."
—Rebekkah McLellan

WHY TAKE WINTER SESSION?

- ✦ Stay on track

FEATURED COURSES

Dracula: Facts and Fictions (01:510:255)

When most people think of Dracula, the first thing that comes to mind is the image of a caped count with fake blood dripping from his toothy mouth. This winter, students who register for the course Dracula: Facts and Fictions will learn the actual history behind the legendary figure.

Field expert and historian Professor Stephen Reinert will teach the online course, which runs 12/22/17-1/12/18.

According to Reinert, "the course is designed so students can broadly explore the entire phenomenon from the actual Dracula of history to imaginative constructions in contemporary propaganda, art, folklore, modern literature and film. Students will acquire skills and methods in analyzing how figures of history have attained iconic status."

The course is open to all students. For more information about this course, visit winter.rutgers.edu/dracula.

The Gendered Body: Horror and the Grotesque (01:988:318)

What does the gendered body have to do with scary movies? This winter, students in the course The Gendered Body: Horror and the Grotesque will examine the connection between gender stereotypes and popular horror movies.

The online course, offered 12/22/17-1/12/18 will be taught by J.B. Brager, horror flick enthusiast and longtime researcher of topics like chattel slavery and genocide. "It's interesting to trace how these very serious topics are dealt with in a genre that is often not taken seriously. Because the course is fully online, students can take the course while home over the break, or while working," says Brager.

This course fulfills an elective for Rutgers–New Brunswick students in the Women's and Gender Studies major.

Lifestyles of the Mediterranean (01:377:415)

This winter, students will immerse themselves in Greek culture to learn about the health benefits of the traditional Mediterranean lifestyle through a unique travel-study opportunity.

Lifestyles of the Mediterranean, offered by the Department of Kinesiology and Health at Rutgers University–New Brunswick, will take place in Greece, January 2 – 15, 2018. "The course combines theoretical lectures with experiential activities to cover the fundamental principles and components of the Mediterranean lifestyle," says course instructor Labros Sidossis.

Students will participate in a range of interactive activities including a Greek salad "cook-off," trips to various archeological sites in Athens, and hiking along the Nafplion coastline. The course may be applied as an upper-level elective for students majoring in Exercise Science and Sports Studies at Rutgers. Apply by November 10, 2017.

Bones and Stones Laboratory (01:070:152)

The ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle once wrote "for the things we have to learn before we can do them, we learn by doing them." This theory of experiential learning is still around today—and this winter, students will put it into practice in the Bones and Stones Laboratory.

Field expert Rene Studer-Halbach will teach the hands-on, lab-based course, which runs January 2 - 12, 2018.

"Students will not just learn about the fossils and artifacts, but also how to handle them, measure them, and more," says Studer-Halbach.

The course, which is open to all students, will include a trip to the American Museum of Natural History in NYC to study the human evolution exhibit.
